1. IRAQ

- ISIS uses mustard gas to attack U.S. troops in Iraq

ISIS militants reportedly used mustard gas against the contingent of U.S. and Australian army instructors in Iraq. According to CBS News, the attack took place on April 16. 25 locals, six of them Iraqi army servicemen, sought medical help; the soldiers had trouble breathing, a U.S. army official said. He added that gas masks and other means of chemical protection are now spread among the troops – to prevent possible consequences of next attacks.

- Bus Bombing Marks End to Tragic Evacuation Deal in Syria

Beirut – For two Syrian mothers on opposite sides of a two-year siege, their evacuation from the blockade was supposed to end their suffering, but that was not the case in wake of a bombing outside the city of Aleppo. Noha, a Shi'ite, and Samira, a Sunni, were besieged for nearly two years on each side of Syria's civil war. At the weekend they finally escaped the suffocating blockades under an evacuation agreement – but their ordeal was not over.

- Does Assad Have a Place in Trump's 'Syria Plan'?

Can threatening war crimes charges persuade Syrian President Bashar al-Assad to leave power? What about guaranteeing his safety in exile? These long-shot proposals are at the center of the Trump administration's new effort to resolve Syria's six-year civil war. Though still evolving, President Donald Trump's plans for Syria have come into clearer view since he ordered cruise missiles fired on a Syrian air base to punish Assad for a chemical weapons attack. The strategy breaks down into three basic phases: defeating the Islamic State group, restoring stability in Syria region-by-region and securing a political transition in which Assad ultimately steps down.

- Iraqi parliament hails Yes win in Turkey referendum

Iraq's parliament Monday welcomed a win by the Yes vote in Sunday's historic referendum on Turkey's transition to a presidential system. "We hope the referendum result will contribute to stabilizing and strengthening [Turkey's] relations with neighboring countries," MP Abbas al-Bayati said at a press conference.
